

Hobart, follow the lead of Paris

I SUPPORT Professor Robert Morris-Nunn's Talking Point article (Mercury, November 16). Yet more high-rise in Hobart would greatly diminish its attractiveness to both tourists and those of us who live here. Paris, and Cambridge in England are hugely popular with both tourists and residents and deliberately kept high-rise out of their city centres. Why cannot Hobart, with a relatively modest demand for tourist accommodation, follow these fine examples?

Mer 18 Nov 16

Richard Upton
Battery Point

GREAT EXAMPLE OF PLANNING: The Paris skyline at night.